

Biography

Marcus Sammer is currently a research scientist for the Turing Center at the University of Washington. In May of 2005, he completed a Ph.D. in Mathematics at the Georgia Institute of Technology. Prior to this he obtained a B.S. in Mathematics at Southern Adventist University in Tennessee. Since September of 2005, Marcus has been enjoying a change of scenery by working in natural language processing. He is currently involved in exploring the potential for human computer interaction in solving ambiguity problems in statistical machine translation systems.